Garden Pathways

Today on Gardening in a Minute: garden pathways.

Garden paths are important, but often forgotten features of landscapes. They help you navigate your garden and can allow you to create outdoor rooms along the way.

Replace traffic-damaged turf in often traversed areas with beautiful planned pathways that help rainwater flow into the ground, filtering pollutants.

Construct your pathways from brick, flagstones, or porous pavers. Or use crushed shells, stepping stones, or gravel. Make sure to add space between your landscape pavers to allow water to flow through them.

Mulch is another great way to define garden paths attractively. Line mulched pathways with an edging material to keep mulch in-bounds.

Show your family and friends the way by directing them along your new garden paths!
